SOCIAL NOTES.

The news of the recent death at Needwood Forest, near Frederick, Md., of Thomas Sim Lee, aged eighty-four, grandson of one of the colonial governors of Maryland, calls up an interesting history of the romantic wooing and wedding of his 055. The latter embraces the following: grandfather 130 years ago, at what is now a Cash on hand, $1,000; stock in trade, $30,decayed old mansion on the road leading 000; carriages and other vehicles, $75; mafrom this city to Maribero'.

Among a number of old letters which have come to light during the past century is one which in spite of torn parchment and faded ink still exhales a breath of romance. Thomas Sim Lee, although only twenty years of age, had nothing but his pleasing address and distinguished name to recommend him to the favor of Miss Mary Diggs, only child of Ignatius Diggs of Melwood Park. He was a grandson of Philip Lee of Virginia, who crossed over into Maryland and became the founder of that branch of the family known as the Maryland Lees. Mr. Diggs, a wealthy proprietor of Prince George's county, Md., was owner of a superb estate and countless slaves, and lived in princely style among the southern gentry of the period.

Strauss, the Washington Times Company, the Times Company, W. P. Leech, trustee; numerous dependents, to whom he administered justice, and it was not surprising that young Lee, the favored lover of his dear Mollie, without fortune or patrimony, Hamburger Bros. & Co., Townsend, Grace & Co. and Coblens, Cohn & Co., creditors of Mr. Dyrenforth, also recommended to should have been frowned upon by her father. Besides, Mr. Diggs was an ardent Catholic, a friend of Lord Baltimore, and bitterly opposed to the union of his daugh-ter with one not of the same faith. He ob-The matter was called to the attention of Justice Clabaugh and he signed an order tained from her a promise not to marry without his consent, and consequently a appointing Messrs. F. > It seems he was reproached by the angry father for intimating to her that he would marry without his consent, as he left immediately for Marlboro', the county town of Melwood Park, and wrote the following

"UPPER MARLBORO', August 3, 1771. "Mr. Diggs-Sir: I have without design told you an untruth which I now acknowledge. I do not wish to deceive you and wish all who have interested themselves in the affairs of your daughter and myself had the same candor. Your refusal of consent for me to marry Miss Diggs and your great hurry in leaving threw me into such confu-sion that I was deprived of utterance. You told me she had promised not to marry without your consent, and instead of my saying that she had told me of such a promise I said I never asked her to marry me against your consent. I honestly con-fess that I asked her to marry me without

After his governorship he established a winter home in Georgetown, D. C. He had a daughter, Miss Eliza Lee, who presided over her father's house in Georgetown for eleven years, after the death of her mother, and afterward married Mr. Outerbridge Horsey of Delaware, and they both settled on the Needwood farm. Mrs. Lee died in 1805, and in a volume of Thomas a Kempis, given to her by Prince Galitzin, a Russian convert, known throughout the country as Father Smith, Lee wrote: "The gift of Rev. Mr Smith to Mary Lee, 1788, passed by the ever to be lamented death of my wife to

He had joined the Catholic Church some years before his wife's death, having made a vow to do so when she was dangerously ill, and he built in the vicinity a church named St. Mary's in honor of his companion of thirty years of married life. He died in 1819, aged seventy-four, leaving four sons and two daughters, among whom the estate of Melwood Park, in Prince George's county, was divided after being sold, the estate of Needwood Forest having been left by him to his elder daughter, Eliza. Lee's children and those of Charles Carroll of Carrollton afterward intermarried, and all had large families, and Needwood Forest is still possessed by the Lee family, as shown by the death there of the descendant above extending almost to the limits of Mariboro' It passed into other hands and was finally sold to the Pumphreys, now residents of Washington, who held it until about ten years ago, when it was subdivided and sold for garden and dairy purposes. The man-sion, of which a large portion is still standing, is about si xmiles from Marlboro' on the road leading thence to Washington. stood well in from the highway and was ap-proached by a drive flanked on both sides by immense cherry trees, from witch the place was locally known as "Cherry Walk."

The trees have long since borne their last fruit and died away, and of the house there remains only the front portion, containing two or three rooms, where the wainscoting, convent mentels and elegant decreme lines. carved mantels and elegant doorways linger as reminders of days of glory long departed -the mute witnesses of many smiles and many sighs in two centuries passed. About one hundred yards east of the mansion is the Diggs family burying ground, where, among the headstones, are those of two priests who then officiated in the chapel of the mansion and in the church in Marlboro'.

The outcrop of the smaller coal, designated "No. 7" by the Indiana state survey, which occurs above the Petersburg coal, will be shown in the same manner, as will also some of the coals beneath the latter. The maps will be accompanied by an account of the geologic history of the region, by descriptions of a number of important drainage changes, and by a detailed description of the character and structure of the rochs, especially of the coal. The maps described are the first installment of a series which will later be extended westward into MILWAUKEE, August 8.-The closing day's session of the American Osteopathic Association was opened with clinics, followed by a paper on "Prognosis," by Nettie H. Bolles of Denver, Col. This was followed by a symposium on practice par-ticipated in by H. F. Bernard of Detroit, Mich., and C. W. Young of St. Paul, Minn.

"You may say for me," added Mr. Leupp, "that I am not now, and never have been, an applicant for any office, and am content to remain in the ranks and support any good man who may offer himself." Colonel Fleming continues to be a prime favorite with many prominent business men. Mr. Norris, Mr. Shoemaker, Mr. Clayton, Mr. A. A. Wilson, Mr. Jesse Wilson, General John M. Wilson and Mr. Cox Investigations Being Conducted by the Among the important economic studies now being conducted by the United States geological survey in the region east of the Mississippi river is the investigation of the coal field within the first district in southwestern Indiana, the results of which will
